Audit Assessment Findings, Rehmann Group - Richard Carpenter and Corrine Konley:

Mr. Carpenter and Ms. Konley gave a verbal update regarding the recent Human Resources and financial assessment for NLCMHA. There will be a written Human Resources report distributed in February.

HR Assessment:

The Rehmann Group met with 49 employees for face-to-face interviews. There was also an employee engagement survey distributed agency-wide. 66% of the employees (233) completed the survey. Ms. Konley reviewed the results with the Board.

Ms. Konley commented that the current HR team is relatively new, so most of their findings reflect on time prior to the current team's arrival.

The assessment revealed that there has been an environment of fear, intimidation, and lack of respect in the past. The employee engagement survey reflected a desire for transparency, accountability, teamwork, and support from the Board.

There needs to be a full I-9 audit and FLSA audit. The EEO statement also needs to be updated. There are also safety concerns that need to be addressed.

The Rehmann Group recommends developing and implementing an objective process for making wage adjustments. In the past, these have not always been given consistently or fairly. Additionally, in the past, the hiring process lacked consistency. There is room for improvement in both the hiring and onboarding process.

It was also mentioned that during the previous CEO Search, certain applications may not have been given to the Board as they should have been.

The performance management process needs an overhaul. There needs to be employee performance evaluations and exit interviews. Supervisors need more training and growth.

There is a lot to overcome from the past. The Human Resources department is making positive strides, such as working on an employee handbook to help set the foundation for employees.

Overall, the employees were cooperative and eager to discuss issues with the Rehmann Group. Many noted in the survey that stability of having the current CEO has been helpful and has made many impactful changes.

Financial Assessment:

The group's first observation was that standard cost allocation had not been properly implemented. There are plans to give training to staff to help get things coded correctly and sorted.

Some financial policies have been too flexible, causing inconsistent practices and treatment for certain transactions. At the same time, there have been some policies and procedures which have not been flexible enough.

Grant writing has been well written with good intentions but has lacked the proper planning of the grant funds, and money may not have been properly allocated.

During the assessment, they struggled to find evidence of how overhead or administration costs were being allocated to grants and other business operations. That process was either not occurring or not occurring consistently.

There is a suspicion of collusion. The financial assessment stage has been put on hold so a forensic investigation can take place. This will identify if there have been any inappropriate financial activities.

The assessment showed that there may have been two or more people who have participated in collusion within the finance department. There may have been things intentionally hidden. This results in a situation where they cannot rely on the organization's internal controls, as documents and reports could have been fabricated. In the presence of suspected collusion, certain information is not reliable.

There is suspicion that documents were fabricated to support transactions that may have never existed.

Forensic investigation is a specialized group under a private investigation firm license that works with law enforcement and authorities. NMRE Board has authorized this. It will take a few months. They will start by looking at 2023 and go further back if needed. One of the goals of the forensic investigation is to determine if there has been misappropriation of assets or intentional or unintentional false reporting.

One of the concerns is the appropriate use of Medicaid dollars, which may result in a return of funds to the NMRE.

Adjournment: Motion to adjourn By T. Bratton, seconded by T. Lentych.

Respectfully submitted,

Stacy Maiville
